

Bradley A. Lebow

Biography

Brad is a business lawyer. For over a decade, he has represented businesses, from Fortune 100 companies to start-ups and individuals, in a broad range of commercial litigation matters, including consumer class action defense, business torts, and shareholder and partnership disputes. Brad also frequently advises businesses on risk management matters and contract issues. In addition to his business law and complex commercial litigation practice, Brad also has extensive experience representing regional, national, and international law firms in complex professional liability litigation, as well as representing healthcare entities in litigation, including payor-provider disputes, insurance bad faith, and cases involving ERISA, the Medicare Act, and California's Knox-Keene Act. Known for his analytical skills and practical advice, Brad brings a problem-solver's approach to the table whether the challenge is in handling risks posed by litigation or in assisting with a client's strategic business goals.
